In the first issue of Identities: Global Studies in Culture and Power (1994), Nina Glick-Schiller pointed out that issues of identity and culture had emerged to be central to «the current historical moment». The journal wanted to «explore the relationship between racial, ethnic and power hierarchies within national and global arenas and the multiple processes by which cultural representation, domination and resistance are embedded in social relationships».

More than 20 years later - the parallel trend to globalization, the shift from the old imperial peripheries to the post-imperial metropolitan centres changes the post Cold War world order constantly and permanently. New technological possibilities have changed our notion of time, spatial perception and the boundaries of our selves. Current artistic practises reflect these shifts and general uneasiness, as our identities are uncertain.

The other great contribution by Nina Glick-Schiller besides the founding of the above mentioned journal to sociology was to coining the term transmigrant, which is used to describe mobile subjects that create and sustain multiple social relations that link together their societies of origin and residence. These mobile subjects are now viewed as transnational migrants or transmigrants to distinguish them from migrants and immigrants. An interesting concept that has never been fully applied to art, its objects and artists.

The histories connecting London and Altdorf are manifold and diverse, linked to the discovery of the Alps as a frontier within the European continent and a garden like Eden within an Empire, to the industrialisation and the machines that propelled it forward, as well as to tourism as an industry and a state of mind. This symposium aims to revisit these histories while rethinking our roles within a globalized world.

London is thriving as a truly global city, attracting foreign investments and foreign talent, while its residents must find a way to deal with the post-Brexit blues. One important factor in the vote to leave, was a new and strange nationalism, that is sweeping Europe as a whole. Switzerland has the role of a kind of avant-garde for nationalists from Hungary to Germany, all claiming that they want to copy the Swiss model. But is Switzerland truly a self-sustained paradise, a successful “nation of the will”?

Artists, curators and other cultural workers are still trying to come to terms with these developments that could be described as a backlash to what Europeans think of globalization. The questions at the core of this are: who are we? And if we are, who do we want to be? Could we be transmigrants without realizing it and what would be a transmigratory state of mind?

This symposium coincides with the exhibition London meets Altdorf at Haus für Kunst Uri, Altdorf Switzerland. Participating artists: Nicole Bachmann, Pascal Danz, Luigina Dapit, Monica Ursina Jäger, Marc Latzel, Rachel Lumsden, Martina von Meyenburg, Romeo Vendrame, Discography by Jean- Martin Büttner
Hosts

Damian Christinger, writer and curator from Zurich, studied Asian Art History and Intercultural Studies. He was the co-founder, of Christinger De Mayo, a project gallery trying to build bridges between European and Latin American Art, which closed its doors December 2015. He now works as an independent curator and publicist. His main focus is on the construction of “the other” in intercultural relations and art history. His last museum show at the Museum Rietberg featured 21 Swiss artists, who questioned the relationship between the collection of antique non-European art and its local public. His current projects include such different topics as the history of curry, the Swiss Merchant Navy and the Moomins. He worked as a curator for the TBA21 project The Current and is lecturing at the University of the Arts Zurich.

Monica Ursina Jäger is a Swiss artist and lecturer living in London and Zurich. Her multidisciplinary practice engages with spatial experiences both within the natural and constructed environment. Recent works address the uncertainties of geopolitics related to natural resources and man-made production. Interdisciplinary projects include urban planning, green infrastructures and narrative environments in public spaces. Jäger studied in Singapore and London and gained her MA at Goldsmiths College. She has exhibited widely nationally and internationally, e.g., Kunsthalle Düsseldorf, Kunstmuseum Thun, Helmhau Zurich, Galeria Pilar Sao Paulo, Sammlung Essl Klosterneuburg/Wien, Haus Konstruktiv Zurich, Kunsthalle Osnabrück, Kunstverein Pforzheim. Winner of the Swiss Art Award 2007. Next year she is invited to the Research Residency Program at NTU CCA the Centre for Contemporary Arts Singapore. Monica Ursina Jäger is a research associate and lecturer at the Institute of Natural Resource Sciences IUNR at University of Applied Sciences Zurich ZHAW. www.muj.ch

Nicole Bachmann is an artist based in London. She works in performance, installation and writing. Her work investigates the voice as a tool and method of knowledge production. Through layering, intonation, repetition, fragmentation and musicality, the voice pushes the text beyond “pure“ signification of words and surplus meanings are created. Her installations are sites for examining the connections and similarities between the construction of language, sense and the making of objects. Her work was included in Manifesta 11 and shown at Eastside Projects, Birmingham, Tallinn Art Hall, Estonia, ICA, London, Whitechapel Gallery, London, MOTINTERNATIONAL project London, Turner Contemporary, Margate UK and Rowing, London. She’s also the co-founder of Performance as Publishing, a collaborative project with Ruth Beale. www.nicolebachmann.net
Blue Curry is an artist from The Bahamas living in London who holds an MFA in Fine Art from Goldsmiths University. Working primarily in sculpture and installation, Blue Curry uses an idiosyncratic language of commonplace objects and found materials to engage with themes of exoticism, tourism and culture. He has exhibited extensively, participating in the Liverpool, SITE Santa Fe and Jamaica Biennials, as well as in group shows at PPOW Gallery in New York, The Art Museum of the Americas in Washington DC, and the Victoria and Albert Museum in London, among many others. He had his first institutional solo show Stranger Than Paradise at the Nassauischer Kunstverein in Germany in and was featured in the Hatje Cantz publication The Sense of Movement: When Artists Travel. He is currently showing work in Relational Undercurrents: Contemporary Art of The Caribbean Archipelago at the Museum of Latin American Art in California and will be in the upcoming Bienal de la Resistencia in Caracas, Venezuela. www.bluecurry.com

Brigitte Dätwyler studied Fine Arts at Lucerne University of Applied Sciences and Arts until 2005 and works in Zurich as an artist and lecturer for performance and fine art. Among other prices and grants, in 2009 she spent 6 months in an artist residency in India, obtained the Swiss Performance Award in 2010 and just finished an artist residency in Paris. Her performative interventions and installations are presented and exhibited regularly, among others at Helmhauz Zurich, Kunstmuseum Bern, Kunstmuseum Luzern and the Swiss Art Awards in Basel. In her work the artist deals with daily cultural gestures, the dialogic potential of art as encounters and experiences and the motivation behind artistic endeavour and aesthetic ambitions. www.brigittedaetwyler.ch
