In lieu of conclusion: cardio-pedagogy in Derrida and White God

Through the lens of Kornél Mundruczó’s 2015 film White God, this paper addresses you. Frontally a film about a canine uprising or even revolution in the streets of a eugenically-charged Budapest, the film allows – demands – that we take account of every theatre, stage, auditorium, courtyard and arena as one of an autopsic architecture, an inspectacular attempt to calculate finitude by means of the death of the other. It generates and, I will argue, dismantles, our familiar understanding of law as lex talionis, as vengeance, as the calculative exchange of an eye for an eye. In so doing – and in place of conclusion – the film appeals to justice to come. To make this legible the paper proposes that we follow the intimate proximity in Derrida’s work between the poetic, the ethical and the political. Building upon his deconstruction of the conceptual distinction between ‘the human’ and ‘the animal’ and the death sentence that such a distinction licenses, I draw in particular on Derrida’s work on poetics and the death penalty. With blood, the heart and the heartbeat in common, reading White God together with Derrida generates what I name a cardiopedagogy, a learning by heart.

Bio:
Lynn Turner is the editor of The Animal Question in Deconstruction (EUP, 2013) co-author of Visual Cultures As... Recollection (Sternberg, 2013), and co-editor of The Edinburgh Companion to Animal Studies (EUP, 2018). She is currently completing her monograph Poetics of Deconstruction: on the threshold of differences (Bloomsbury, 2020). She is Senior Lecturer in Visual Cultures at Goldsmiths, University of London.